

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My initial acknowledgement is to the authors, for the originality in their thinking, various research projects, and painstaking development of these ideas. The impetus for the project came from the inaugural conference (2014) of the Association of Communication Scholars & Professionals of Nigeria (ACSPN).

The association is privileged to have several generations of Nigerian scholars and professionals. Those whose work appear here, belong to the second and third generations. This publication comes with a salute to those pioneers who blazed the trail in Nigerian academy and to those who continue to work tirelessly for its vibrancy. We are grateful for the support of all ACSPN members, trustees and executive committee. Without this the aspiration for the book could have been dead in the water.

Worthy of mention is the Department of Mass Communication, University of Lagos which has touched many, as evident in their arguments. This fact is also evident on close scrutiny of the contributors' profile. The similarity in their academic DNA betrays the dominant influence of the department. The core team at Lagos in the late 70s / 80s deserves our appreciation in this pioneering effort; we have tried to build on the foundations which you lay.

Our esteemed professor, Idowu Sobowale, (the teacher of teachers) continues to bless us with his presence, guidance and encouragement. His personal intervention in this project is most appreciated.

We are grateful for the encouragement from our overseas colleagues, especially to Daya Thussu for the foreword, a commitment which he undertook at very short notice, in spite of an extremely busy schedule.

Finally we must thank God for life, health and the ability to contribute in some capacity to thinking regarding concepts, theories and debates that shape media industries in Nigeria and elsewhere. We are all richer for the interactions.

This book is dedicated to all honest, hardworking, hard pressed yet resilient and ever hopeful Nigerians.
